THE greatest of armies that ever marched
Beneath the heavens sublimely arched—
Oh, never to carnage it marches out
With rumble of drums and the battle shout
And banners a-flutter and flags unfurled,
And yet it conquers the wide round world!
NOR ever with measured and martial tread
This host advances to deeds of dread,
To razing of palaces, spires and domes,
To pillage of cities and sack of homes,
To slaughter of brother men who fight
Beneath a standard of brutal Might.

THIS greatest of armies never bears
The torch of Ruin that flames and flares,
Nor burnished rifle nor blade of steel,
Nor strains at the heavy cannon wheel,
Nor burrows in earth to crouch and wait
The issue of fortune—or of fate!

THIS host of soldiery grander far
Than any that marches to maim and mar—
Oh, not by regiments, not by corps,
It sweeps where the battle thunder roars
And the shrapnel shrieks and the bullets whine
On the hell red front of the firing line!

Ah, Greatest and Bravest of Armies, Here's
For All of Your Soldiers
Thrice Three Cheers!

AND yet these wonderful warriors fight—
And some by day and some by night—
As bravely as any that charge and wheel
Where the spent battalions break and reel
And the flags go down and the swaths of slain
Are strewn on the fields like stricken grain.

FOR I say that the bravest of all brave men—
And I say it over again, again—
Are they who enlist for the term of life,
In the struggle for home and bairns and wife,
In the Army of Labor and fight their way,
And some by night and some by day!

FOR these are the builders, the makers, this
The army whose weapons never miss.
The hammer, the saw, the pick, the drill,
They handle with swift, unerring skill.
In toil and moil they build and make;
They fashion and form—for love's sweet sake!

Ah, greatest and bravest of armies, here's
For all of your soldiers thrice three cheers!
With faces forever toward the front,
By day and by night you bear the brunt!
With never a drum nor a flag unfurled
You march and conquer the wide round world!
